Models of institutionalised (dis-)integration? What next for the EU-US, CETA & Brexit?

Significant challenges lie ahead with a new level of hostility from the US administration towards Europe not witnessed in the post-World War II era and a hard Brexit looms large under a tight negotiation deadline with the UK. The institutionalization of EU-US relations envisaged in TTIP was far reaching. CETA possesses a more modest variant of institutional cooperation based upon Regulatory Cooperation and an Investment Court. A key part of the Brexit negotiation 'red lines' of the UK government is to deny the EU institutions, specifically its Court of Justice any role in any future agreement. The Trump regime has concerns about China's rising incidence of litigation before the WTO and has mooted circumventing this key institution of the global legal order in favour of Reagenesque methods. The fall back of the UK Government in the Brexit talks is to adopt WTO rules and its institutional provisions. And so how do we understand institutions and institutionalization in this new era and its relationship to contemporary global governance?
